

Predicting Car Price

Minimum Viable Product

This project's purpose is to better understand which factors are most important in determining car prices as well as how these factors affect prices of cars.

To start exploring this goal we used linear regression model with one feature to check how is our factor is correlated linearly with our target which is price.

This result suggests that engine size have a significant positive impact on car price.